and in early manhood joined his brother John in the oil industry. For forty-six years, from 1865 to 1911, William was at the head of the New York business of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and until the latter year was President of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. When he was twenty-three he married Almira G. Goodsell, who died two years ago at their home in this city. Their only child, William Goodsell Rockefeller, survives his

Mr. Rock-feller was a member of the Union League, the New York Yacht and other clubs and a director in more than a score of copper, rallroad, electric and other corporations. He was interested in the following companies: Anaconda Copper, Brooklyn Union Gas, Consolidated Gas and subsidiaries, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, National City Bank of New York, New York Central Railroad and subsidiaries, United Metals and the United States Trust Company.

Mr. Rockefeller's health became natter of curiosity and public interest in 1912-1913 when a Congressional committee investigating the so-called 'Money Trust' desired him as a wit ness. After a search for days by subpoena-servers, it was finally an counced that he was at his Jeky Petroleum since that day can best be Island (Ga.) estate, but that his health would be endangered by hi appearance before the inquiry.

A special Congressional committee was sent to Jekyl Island, and the inquiry started, but only a half dozen questions were put to the witness when he was seized with a spasm of coughing. It was then announced that Mr. Rockefeller was suffering from cancer of the throat.

William Rockefeller left schoo when he was seventeen years old and took a position as bookkeeper for a miller. At twenty-one he went with a rival miller, and a short time later became a partner in the business. Two years later he and his brother.

John, established the Standard Oil Works in Cleveland, Their third partner was Samuel Andrews, a veteran oil man. This business was a tremendous success from its inception, and in 1870 the partnership was dissolved, its place being taken by the Standard Oil Company of Ohio.
